Thomas R. McGlashen, pioneer resident of Frankfort township was found dead in bed by his son Alfred in his home 660 Glenwood ave. in Joliet about 5 o'clock Monday afternoon.

He had been ill for some time. A coroner's inquiry found he had died of natural causes.

Surviving are two sons, Robert of San Diego, Calif., and Alfred of Joliet; a daughter, Mrs. Pearl Hoffman of Portland, Oregon; a brother Joseph McGlashen of Chicago and five grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Frankfort Methodist church with the pastor Rev. Rudolph Malek and Rev. G. Gerhold of the St. Peter Evangelical and Reformed church of Frankfort officiating. Burial was in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, Frankfort.

One Hurt When Auto Hits Train at Mokena Crossing

They Have Come Out

By Congressman Chauncey W. Reed 11th District, Illinois

Proponents of the so-called Lend-Lease bill have at last come out into the open and admitted that the enactment of this bill will probably mean the involvement of our nation in the war. Beating their chests and bellowing challenges to the whole universe several venerable patriarchy informed the world during the past week that they are not afraid of conflict and that they are ready to fight—in Washington. Some of the favorite phrases heard during the past week were: "There are worse things than a war," (the gentleman? who spoke this phrase apparently has never seen war); "We'll fight. If war comes I'm ready," (the gentleman who spoke these words didn't in '98 or '17. We wonder why he wasn't then) If medals were issued for verbal bravery plenty of brass would be necessary to decorate some of our nation's patriarchy who prefer to do their fighting with words instead of guns. Another indication that our country is on the brink of conflict was a statement made by Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, who, in testifying before the House Banking Committee uttered the following remarks: "We're in the war; at least we're nearly in the war; we're preparing for it; when you do that you've got to throw money away".

The Secretary was testifying in behalf of a bill permitting the Federal Housing Administration to insure defense housing mortgages. After he had made the foregoing statement, Secretary Jones turned to the committee's official stenographer and asked that his statement be removed from the record.

Informed of the Secretary's remarks President Roosevelt in commenting to newspaper men in effect said, "Words, just words".

Speaking against the bill in the Senate, Senator Johnson of California declared that the bill "makes the Chief Executive a dictator or worse." Senator Clark an overseas veteran of 1917 denounced the legislation as a war bill and predicted that if our nation goes into war it will emerge with a totalitarian form of government itself. Senator Vandenberg charged that the White House has become the general headquarters for the second World War and that this bill would make the President "the power politician No. 1 of the World."

New Lenox To Vote On Fire Protection Bond Issue

A special election will be held in the town of New Lenox, to vote on the issuance of a $10,000 bond issue March 11th for the New Lenox Fire Protection District.

The proposition to be voted on is to issue bonds for $10,000 for the purpose of constructing a fire engine house, including all land necessary for such purpose, the purchase of a fire engine, and all equipment and appurtenances necessary therefor.

It is pointed out that by voting in favor of the bond issue the people of the township will enable the trustees of the fire protection district to get started right away on getting the needed protection and the payment of the bonds thru taxes will be spread over a term of years, but if the bond issue is defeated the next step would be the issuance of tax anticipation warrants with a noticeable increase in taxes. For that reason the bond issue should be voted for favorably.

PTA Speaker

The New Lenox PTA will meet March 13th. The speaker will be Father Eligius Weir of Joliet.

COMING TO ROXY THEATRE

Tinley Club Has Outstanding Program

Mrs. Frank Baldwin, president of the Tinley Park Woman's Club called the February 26th meeting of the club to order at 10:30 a. m.

Mrs. R. E. Pfeifer, 3d dist. Press and publicity chairman was presented as the speaker for the morning.

Mrs. Pfeifer's unusual personality radiated rays of interest, understanding and humor to everyone who attended this session. She gave us many excellent facts about Woman's Club background.

Mrs. Wm. Semmler then presented the Calumet City Group of Juniors who had accompanied Mrs. Pfeifer. They in turn presented an original playlet "The Federation Has a Birthday". This skit took us back to the time when we wore three starched petticoats under our floor length suit skirt and drove to meeting with a horse and surrey, but didn't breathe a word to friend husband about going.

The regular business meeting was held at 1:30 p. m.

At 2 p. m., Mrs. Baldwin presented Mrs. Robert Houts, 3rd district Literature Chairman. Mrs. Houts reviewed "Quietly My Captain Waits" by Evelyn Eden. This was done in a most delightful manner and every one present felt, when Mrs. Houts had finished, that she herself had spent a pleasant afternoon reading a really worth while book. The book itself was not only well written but as Mrs. Houts pointed out was based on true historical facts about the early French Colonies and Indian Tribes in Canada.

We were indeed fortunate to have enjoyed two such inspiring programs. Gretchen Collins of Oak Forest was presented by Mrs. Melvin Rensink, our music chairman. Gretchen is a member of the chorus at Thornton High and altho she is but 13 years old, she thrilled us immensely with her untrilled voice.

It was voted to have a "Spring Festival" or what have you? Put on your thinking cap and send us lots of ideas. The only shadow on the afternoon was the fact that Mrs. Roy Hannum, our Literature chairman was taken ill and could not enjoy it with us. We wish her a speedy recovery.

No one doubts but that the times in which we are living are ones that are akin somewhat to an early period of our country which, "tried men's souls", and therefore it is absolutely necessary that every person bestir themselves to an understanding of existing situations.

Because of these conditions, the members of the Frankfort Township Republican Women's Club, felt they should do something else, than just at election times, seek votes for their party's candidates. Therefore, quite suddenly, a decision was made to hold a meeting which would be entirely AMERICAN, and in which all party lines are forgotten, and where Americans can meet, hear and talk, about conditions of our country.

This meeting will be held TONIGHT, Friday, February 28, in the Hatch hall in Mokena at 7:45 o'clock.

Mokena is being very highly honored, to have as speaker, Miss Betty Browning, Club Editor of a large Chicago newspaper. She will speak on the "Lend-Lease" Bill, and answer questions at the close.

Miss Browning is a national speaker of great renown and too much cannot be said of her ability as a speaker.

We are urging every resident of Mokena and surrounding villages and territory, men and women, to attend this meeting, so we can reward such an outstanding speaker, with a hall filled to capacity, and incidentally also reward each one present, by hearing such a splendid person as Miss Browning.

This is a most vital issue and every citizen of this democratic country should avail themselves of the privilege they have of attending.

Don't forget! Tell your neighbors. Urge them to come. This is a serious issue. Admission is free.

Frankfort Lions To Hold Charter Night

The Frankfort Lions Club are making preparations for a fine program to be presented in connection with the presenting of the charter to the Frankfort Club by representatives of Lions International at the church parlors of the St. Peter's Evangelical church in Frankfort on Tuesday evening, March 4th at 7:30 o'clock.

A supper will be served following which the program and presentation of charter will take place. About 200 guests are expected to attend.

Tickets are on sale by the various members of the club which has 25 charter members.

No Water

Mokena housewives had a big surprise Thursday noon when the city water faucets in their kitchens were dry and just at the time when dinner was in the making. Water had to be carried from the more fortunate neighbors who had private wells.

Soon it was discovered that the entire town was without water and the village officials and Martin Meuhler the care taker of the water department were flooded with telephone calls asking why the sudden shut off of the village supply.

It was explained that a big leak in a water main near the John Capel place in the northwest part of the village. The water supply service was not restored for several hours.

Hold Party

The Auxiliary of the Mokena V. F. W. Post entertained at a Washington's Birthday party at Hatch Hall last Thursday night. Cards were played and refreshments were served at a beautifully decorated table. The decorations and color scheme were in keeping with the spirit of the day.

'Terminal Education' of Junior Colleges Prepares Youth for Actual Employment

By WARREN BROKER

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
NEW YORK.—With college degrees needed for only one-sixth of the jobs available today, the great majority of American youth is forced to look elsewhere for training. Young men and women frequently find they can't get a job without experience, and cannot get experience without a job.

To provide these youth with training necessary for satisfactory employment, junior colleges have been founded in forty-four states.

Problems and responsibilities of these schools face members of the American Association of Junior Colleges meeting in Chicago February 27 to March 1.

Unlike high schools which frequently serve as preparatory schools for a college education, junior colleges strive to prepare their students for semi-professional and skilled occupations. This training for actual employment is known as "terminal education" and represents the fundamental purpose of their two-year courses.

'Violates' Old Tradition.

Some educators watched the introduction of "terminal education" courses with distaste. They frowned upon instruction in trades, where they were accustomed to seeing only English, French and other liberal arts, and condemned the policy as beneath the "dignity" of college instruction.

Junior college administrators refuse to be swayed by this appeal to "tradition." To them the needs of the pupil are uppermost.

A more justifiable criticism was raised by other educators who pointed out that adequate professional education cannot be crowded into two years.

Leaders in the junior college movement explain in defense that their schools don't even attempt to train surgeons, lawyers or engineers. For example, while they don't train doctors, they can prepare dental assistants, medical secretaries and sanitary inspectors.

These semi-professional skills provide five times as many jobs as the ones requiring two to eight years more training.

Liberal Arts Still Taught.

Specialized training in these skills does not necessitate neglect of the so-called liberal arts. Usually only about half of the time is required to provide the specific training desired, leaving the remainder for broader objectives.

During the last six years enrollment in the junior colleges has doubled. There are now 610 junior colleges in the country serving 236,162 students. Enrollment last year jumped 20 per cent, while enrollment in four-year colleges and universities increased less than 1 per cent.

"Experience shows that most junior college students will not go on into a university," says Walter C. Eells of Washington, D. C., secretary of the American Association of Junior Colleges. "Although two-thirds of them say they are preparing for university or four-year college work, three-fourths of them do not go beyond the two junior college years."

Many Business Courses.

While junior colleges offer courses in almost every field of endeavor, no one school gives instruction in all of them. On the contrary they generally specialize in certain fields.

In business alone, for example, 286 junior colleges are giving terminal,

Junior colleges set aside tradition to offer training in many fields. The student to the left, above, is doing work which will prepare him to be a competent carpenter upon graduation from his two-year course. The window dresser, right, will have two years of experience behind him when he finishes "going to school on the job" in a local department store.

two-year courses. General business courses are offered by 204 of these, and secretarial by 202. There are also many less usual courses, such as accounting in 27, banking and finance in 6, hotel and restaurant management in 5, merchandising in 28, and salesmanship in 24.

Business institutions in many cities co-operate with the junior colleges in planning and giving these courses. In Hillyer Junior college, Hartford, Conn., the student works eight weeks as a salesman, machine operator, or secretary, then attends classes for eight weeks while the job is taken over by another student, with whom he is paired.

When a person in San Francisco buys a shirt or sits down to lunch or registers in a hotel, he may be waited on by a student of San Francisco Junior college who is taking the course in salesmanship or hotel and restaurant management.

Engineering Very Popular.

One of the most popular branches of terminal education is engineering and technology, in which 216 junior colleges offer courses. This does not mean they try to persuade young graduates at the end of two years that they are engineers. But it does mean that there are from three to eight times as many foremanships, drafting jobs and technological positions requiring two years of preparation, as there are professional engineering positions requiring four to eight years.

Requirements of national defense have given impetus to interest in aviation training. Terminal courses in aviation are given by 196 junior colleges. One group of California junior colleges is even participating as a part of the defense program.

More than 200 junior colleges co-operated this winter in the pilot instruction program of the Civil Aeronautics authority. Nine thousand students were trained for pilots' licenses in these courses.

Terminal courses in agriculture are offered by 83 junior colleges. Seventy offer general courses in this field, while eight give instruction in floriculture and 34 in forestry.

Instruct in Many Fields.

Training is offered in almost every occupation. In the fine arts there is instruction in architecture, costume design, interior decoration, music, photography and dramatics.

Health courses prepare students to work as dental assistants, medical secretaries and nurses.

Trades are well represented in junior college curricula. Instruction is given in welding, radio engineering, drafting, auto mechanics, building trades, chemical engineering, mining, navigation and oil technology. There is also a large number of courses in more specialized fields.

"When one considers that there are 20,000 occupations, it is clear that there could not be 20,000 courses of study to train workers for them," Edward F. Mason of the American Association of Junior Colleges explains. "Fortunately the trainings overlap a good deal, thus permitting training for one field to help fit the student for several."

Although junior colleges have been known in America for only 40 years, and received their real start just 20 years ago, they are found in 44 states. Only two small eastern states, Delaware and Rhode Island, and two sparsely populated western states, Wyoming and Nevada, are without them.

In California the junior colleges have had their greatest development with 86,357 pupils. Illinois has 19,589, Texas 15,085, Missouri 8,143, North Carolina 6,602 and Massachusetts 5,994.

Educators are well aware of the need for improvement. They are striving to remedy the evils of a secondary education that frequently persists in preparing students for colleges they will never enter, or giving them vocational training for jobs they will never find.

Junior college administrators believe they have found the answer. The youth of America hopes they are right.

U. S. Park Service Acquires Autogiros

WASHINGTON.—The national park service is taking a tip from the hummingbird, the stationary flier.

Unlike that small but pugnacious species, park aviators will not fly sideways or backward, but they will hover over treetops, lakes, and streams by the use of two 225-horsepower autogiros which have been acquired through transfer from the war department. Under favorable conditions the machines are capable of maintaining stability at a virtual standstill over a chosen spot.

Standard planes have been employed from time to time for several years in national parks and allied recreational areas in fighting forest fires, finding lost persons, and transporting medical supplies and food to isolated stations. It was not until 1936, however, that forestry experts used an autogiro for forest spraying. In that year a successful pioneering experiment in distributing a wet spray over cankerworm-infested trees was carried out at Morristown National Historical park, New Jersey.

Special Uses Also.

Special uses are contemplated for the two transferred autogiros. They will scout out forest fires occurring in "blind spots" behind ridges where tower lookouts cannot see, and search for "sleeper" fires that smoulder for several days before bursting suddenly into a general conflagration of serious proportions. A few minutes early in the life of a fire, national park foresters point out, are worth many hours later.

They can execute a 250-foot take-off without wind. Power is supplied by a seven-cylinder radial engine.

The autogiros also will be employed in scouting tree diseases, surveying insect infestations, and taking censuses of wildlife populations. The slow, low-flying machines likewise are adapted specially to precision in certain types of aerial photography, a feature which will make them serviceable to landscape architects, park planners and others who have the task of preparing general development programs for new recreational areas.

Wheeler's attack on aid to Britain not considered likely to make converts . . . Votes in Congress on British aid show very few willing to shut off military supplies.
(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—The latest controversy between President Roosevelt and Sen. Burton K. Wheeler of Montana goes to the very nub of the whole aid-to-Britain issue. Wheeler attacked the administration for giving virtually all the good fighting planes and bombing planes to Britain, and thus depriving the United States national defense of this vital equipment.

The President took the position that this sort of publicity must be very good news for Hitler, though he did not explain whether he meant this was good news because Hitler then would know that the volume of plane deliveries we were making to Britain was the best we were able to do at this time, or whether it would please Hitler to know that the United States was stripping its own defenses.

Be that as it may, the point goes much deeper. The point is that if one accepts the position so long held by the President, and by Wendell L. Willkie, that every blow Britain strikes is helping the United States to the extent that it weakens Germany, then obviously the sound sensible thing for the United States to do is to give Britain everything possible, not because we like Britain, but because in a way the British are fighting our battle.

A considerable proportion of the people of this country approve this position, and from the results of recent polls, an overwhelming majority want to help Britain all we can.

In view of this obvious position of the President, it would seem that Senator Wheeler is guilty of muddying the water when he says that not most but all the fighting planes we produce are being sent to Britain.

'CONVERTS' UNLIKELY

It seems to be a rather oblique attack to single out an obvious part of a policy as being cockeyed if one hopes to win any converts from the other side.

Of course there is no such hope. The minds of the great majority of Americans are pretty well set on this whole thing. Either they believe in aiding Britain or they do not. If they believe in aiding Britain, the individual sections or pieces of the aiding program are not important. If we are going to help Britain, obviously we had better make sure that Britain is not beaten, so the more we can aid the better for us in the long run.

Congressmen Agree On Principle of Aid

Winston Churchill's reference to Wendell Willkie as the head of the "great Republican party" in the recent presidential election in the United States was gall and wormwood to the Republicans in the house and senate who took a far different attitude on the aid-Britain bill.

But, just as the pro-Nazis had no place to go in the presidential campaign, so those who would leap upon Churchill's picture of both great parties in the United States being as one to help Britain as a gross misrepresentation are again in a very bad strategic position.

It is rather obvious that if the Nazi propagandists pick and choose among the utterances of opponents of the aid-Britain bill, both in the house and in the senate, they can find plenty of comfort. They can show the German people, rather convincingly, that America is torn to pieces over this issue.

VOTES MORE IMPORTANT

But when it comes to the VOTES taken in the house of representatives, that is something else again. For instance, while a strong minority voted against final passage of the bill in the house, virtually every one of those house members had voted FOR an amendment which would have authorized a loan to Britain of $2,000,000,000 as a substitute!

In short, from the record of votes rather than speeches, it would seem that the only real issue dividing the house of representatives, and therefore presumably the American people, is the METHOD of aiding Britain.

Bear in mind that no one who raised his voice in favor of a loan of dollars as against lending equipment ever suggested the slightest hope that these dollars would ever be repaid! The notion of all these supplies being repaid in kind AFTER peace has returned is one calculated to bring the strongest of protests from any international trade expert. Not to mention anyone worrying about unemployment in this country after the war.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

Kerosene is a good cleansing agent for porcelain.

Boiled frosting will not crack when put on cake if a few drops of vinegar are added to it when putting in flavoring.

If you want to add extra luster to painted woodwork, add a little vinegar to the wash water.

It is best to whip no more than two cups of cream at a time. Chill bowl and beater. If the cream is beaten in a warm bowl, in a warm place, it is apt to turn to butter.

In making applesauce slice your apples, cook them in a little water until they are soft, then add the sugar. If you add the sugar at first you may need to put in more later and the apples are likely to become hard.

When ironing soft collars start at the center and iron toward the end, beginning at center again to iron the other end. There will then be no creases.

Baked potatoes, if broken as soon as taken from the oven to let out the steam, will not be soggy when served.

Don't cut the lemon in half when you want only a few drops of juice. Instead pierce the lemon with a bone knitting needle and squeeze out the amount required. The hole will seal itself.

To remove the cloudiness which comes over highly polished furniture, wash it with a sponge and tepid water and rub it dry with a wet chamois wrung out of cold water. A dry chamois streaks the surface and does not remove the blur.

First Traveling Post Office Opens

To provide more adequate postal facilities for remote sections of the country, traveling "post offices" are being introduced. The first of these offices on wheels is shown above shortly before it was put into service.

Farmers Are Seeking Self-Sufficiency as Exports Dwindle

LOS ANGELES.—American farm exports have taken a nose-dive as a result of the European war, department of agriculture experts report, but they add that at least part of the loss is being replaced by domestic production of farm products which were formerly imported.

Although wheat exports declined from 61,165,000 bushels during the first 10 months of 1939 to only 13,500,000 bushels in the same period last year, it was explained that

America's current drive for self-sufficiency is leading many farmers to use otherwise idle land for growing native "old world" crops.

Fruit growers and truck gardeners, specializing in such comparatively new crops as figs, lemons, limes and tomatoes, have been among the chief beneficiaries of this new trend, foreign trade figures reveal. Whereas 176,000 boxes of lemons were imported in 1932, practically all are home grown.

"It's a trick!" Virgie cried. "Tom wouldn't sign away his stock. He didn't know what he was signing. He told me so. You tricked him—a helpless old man—in prison!"

"I assure you, Mrs. Morgan, that every document was carefully read to Mr. Pruitt."

"What of it? He wouldn't understand. He was scared and numb—you can scare Tom to death with a legal paper. You tricked him! He would have killed all of you before he'd give up his stock in this mill!"

"I can believe that. Mr. Pruitt's mania for homicide must be embarrassing to you. But—we do not trick people, Mrs. Morgan. We find it unnecessary." The oily voice ran like horrid fingers over her. "So, if you will read this order, please? You will notice that you are directed by Mr. Pruitt, as the custodian of his stocks and property, to deliver to me fifty shares of Morgan mill stock, to the amount of fifty thousand dollars par value—"

"I won't deliver it. I'll fight you through every court in this country first!"

"Of course, you understand that that attitude is quite futile. We can compel you to deliver the stock, Mrs. Morgan. We can bring an officer here with a writ—"

"Bring a dozen officers—if you can find one who'll serve a writ against me!"

"You exaggerate your importance and your invulnerability. I fear. The stock will be taken to Mr. Pruitt for signature to transfer—"

"Transfer to whom?"

"Mr. Withers has contracted to purchase it. I understand."

"I thought so."

"Look here, Virgie, you're wasting your breath," Wallace put in. "This is all settled. You can't do a thing about it."

"I'll see about that."

"I reckon we'll have to fetch a constable." Wallace mustered pious patience with an obdurate woman.

"She's hard-headed. Talk won't be any use. She keeps it in that safe—"

"How do you know where I keep it?" Virgie flashed at him. "I suppose you've got some more spies on my pay-roll? Your Mr. Daniels has done pretty well. I suppose you set those fires yourself?"

"You are being very unreasonable, Mrs. Morgan," soothed the lawyer. "We are being very lenient with Mr. Pruitt. My client has been permanently injured, without justification or excuse—"

"You might as well hush," declared Withers patiently. "Come along and we'll fetch somebody she will listen to."

The door banged behind them. Virgie stood still in the middle of the room, still shaking with white rage.

"The thieves!" she muttered. They would be back presently, with some country constable, who would turn red when she looked at him, but who would drag from an unsavory pocket a paper with the seal of a magistrate upon it, and compel her to open the safe.

A sudden thought came to her. Swiftly she bent and twirled the combination of the safe. The heavy door moved open slowly, and she flung it back and unlocked the inner compartment. Flat, taped bundles of paper slid out into her hand.

She sat on the floor, turning them over rapidly. All the papers on the Hazel Fork property—she knew those well, she had had them out the day before with Wills. Her own stock in the mill tied in an envelope—she counted the shares. All there. But—that was all!

Twice she turned over the entire contents of the compartment. Then in a panic flurry she pulled everything out—old ledgers, old bills, contracts, and leases. Papers that David had filed, papers she herself had put carefully away; tax receipts, deeds to timber lands, insurance policies, she unfolded each, shook it, opened and shook every book, searched frantically.

Tom's stock—and Marian's—was gone!

But—how—

No one but Lucy knew the combination. Lucy and Tom. And Tom was locked in jail.

She was still sitting there, shaking out papers, staring at the empty spaces in the safe when the door opened. She started, then saw that it was Marian who stood there.

"Mother! What has happened?" Marian exclaimed.

Virgie tied a tape with cold fingers. "We've been robbed," she said. "A lawyer came—Wallace was with him. They tricked Tom into signing away his stock last night. They're coming back with an officer to make me give it up. And—it isn't here! It's gone. And your stock—the stock your father left for you—is gone, too!"

Marian closed the door, slid the bolt.

"Mother—get up—and sit down here. You're white as a sheet. You're shaking all over!"

"I can't sit down. They'll be here any minute. They won't believe me. Some fool took it. I suppose—some of the sneaks who've been working for Wallace. It couldn't be Lucy—"

"Oh, no—not Lucy—"

"She knows enough to know that the stock's useless until it's signed over. But—nobody else knew the combination."

"Tom knew it. And—I know it."

"You?"

"Tom wrote it down for me. Mother—sit here and let me bring you some cold water. The stock isn't gone, Mother. It's safe. I took it."

Virgie sank limply into the old chair that had been David's.

"You took it?"

"I took it over to the court-house. To be registered. Tom signed it over to me—a week ago. It's mine. He couldn't give it to anyone else—because he has already signed it over to me. He was going to leave it to me—in his will. He told me so. And I saw the will. He left it here with Lucy that day—when he went up to Hazel Fork. Tom wanted me to have it. So—the last time I went to the jail, he was worrying about it. And—I wanted that stock, Mother—I'm ashamed to tell you why I wanted it. I wanted to control the mill. I wanted to make you fire Brenford Wills—and now—I'm ashamed! But—the stock is safe. They can't touch it."

Virgie's hands fell limply. "Pick up that mess," she muttered, sagging back in her chair. "I give up."

"Here—drink this—"

"I'm all right. It's just—too much has been happening behind my back. Even you—"

"I told you I was ashamed. But anyway, we saved Tom's stock. Maybe we can beat them yet."

Virgie looked numbly at her child. David's child—with her finely cut profile, her dark eyes and resolute mouth. Gallant and splendid—and indomitable. Like David.

"So—you own the mill!" she said.

"Are you angry, Mother?"

"I don't know. It was a shrewd thing to do. Your father would have thought of it. I—seem not to think of things—soon enough."

"You're wonderful, Mother. I don't want to run the mill. I couldn't. I'm not wise enough or strong enough."

"I seem not to be wise, either. Look the safe, Baby—those men will be back."

"They're coming now. It looks like an army."

No one noticed Lucy, coming in at the back door, because so many people were entering by the front way.

Lucy's eyes were blazing and a little wild. Her chin had a dogged angle, and scarlet coins burned in her cheeks. She looked younger, lighter, aglow with a sort of fantastic triumph, almost defiant. She pulled out her chair, then waited as the odd procession filed in.

"Mr. Payne," the lawyer introduced the newcomers, "and Mr. Hooper. And this officer, I suppose, you know?"

The shambling constable, looking awkward and on fire with curiosity, jerked at his hat and said, "Howdy, Mis' Morgan."

"Hello, Ed," greeted Virgie. "You travel in poor company."

"This here is somethin' I got to do," fumbled Ed. "I ain't so set on it—but you know how things is—"

"Go ahead," ordered Virgie, curtly.

Ed rummaged out his paper. Wallace Withers pulled out his heavy old watch and ran his thumb over the crystal, thudded it back again. Lucy's eyes were big and anxious. Only Marian stood calm, smiling a one-sided smile.

"I got an order here," began Ed, "for some stock—belongs to Tom Pruitt—"

"Go on and serve the paper," snapped Withers. "I got to get home. It's most time to milk."

"Don't bother, Ed," Virgie said. "I know what's in that paper. It won't do you any good to read it to me. These gentlemen—and their attorney—are very astute. They know exactly what they are doing. You investigated the ownership of this stock, I suppose, gentlemen?"

"Certainly!" snapped the man Payne.

"You're just stalling, Virgie—and it won't do you a bit of good."

"I'm not trying to do myself any good, Wallace. I'm doing you good. You got that order by fraud—and I can prove it. That might not sound so well in court—"

"We got it square—Pruitt knew what he was doing. He knew he was signing away his stock—he had to save himself."

"Sounds funny," Virgie's voice drawled. "I've known Tom a long time. He was a shrewd old mountain man. He knew what he was doing most of the time—except when he lost his head because he was being robbed. It's hard to believe he'd sign an order to deliver that stock to you—yesterday, that was?—when he had already transferred it—a week ago!"

"I don't believe it!" barked Withers.

"The transfer is recorded. You can see the record at the court-house. That will be about all today, gentlemen—"

Virgie drew herself up superbly.

"No—not quite all," said a quiet voice from the door.

Bransford Wills stood there, lean and calm and tall, a folded paper in his hand.

"Mr. Payne, I assume?" he said.

"And Mr. Hooper? I have just come from Hazel Fork, gentlemen—"

The lawyer interrupted. "This is another matter, sir. We do not know you."

"I am employed by Mrs. Morgan. My name is Wills—formerly with the National Park Commission. I have been investigating the area on Hazel Fork—upon which I understand you gentlemen, all of you, intend beginning some extensive operations in lumber and pulp wood?"

"What's your business?" demanded Withers. "If you've been interfering up there, Virgie Morgan—"

"Mrs. Morgan has not been interfering," Wills said. "Mrs. Morgan knows nothing about this. I happen to be a government cartographer, formerly, as I have said, with the Park Commission. I made the road maps for that area. There has been, evidently, some confusion and delay in surveys and condemnation suits—owing to the confused condition of the title to the land—a condition you gentlemen were very quick to take advantage of, but—I would not advise you to begin timbering operations on that land, gentlemen—now or ever!"

"You're very smart, young fellow," snapped the man Hooper, "but I happen to have a court order that allows me to timber that area to satisfy my claims and those of my associates. Do you think I'd be fool enough to invest money in a proposition like that if I didn't know what I was doing?"

"Unfortunately," Wills smiled a slow, dry smile, "I do not know what sort of a fool you are, Mr. Hooper, I am merely advising you going to leave. He didn't do it. He was a fool—but he isn't crooked. I locked him up. Shall I let him out, Mrs. Morgan?"

Virgie's smile crinkled her face and she burst into a sudden laugh. "No—don't let him out, Lucy. Keep him there till he realizes what a grand girl you are. Keep him there till he melts."

Lucy smiled and it was as though a candle had been lighted behind her eyes.

"I think he's—melting, Mrs. Morgan!"

"It's raining," Marian said suddenly aloud. "Rain and sleet. I'd better take you home, Mother—it's going to be a dreadful night."

And then the telephone rang. Marian answered it, said, "Mother!" faintly, handed the instrument to Virgie, the color draining out of her face.

Virgie barked, "What did you say, how? Who came there? You say he took your gun?"

She hung up slowly, sitting rigid and aghast.

"Tom has escaped!"

"When? How? How could he?"

"Lon says he got away thirty minutes ago. They don't know how. He took Lon's gun."

"But—he'll freeze—on a night like this! We'll have to find him, Mother—"

"Yes—we'll have to find him," Virgie looked at Wills. "Lon says that Wallace Withers was over there today. Tom has found out who it is that has been plotting to ruin us. He's a mountain man—"

"We'll go," Wills said. "They'll look for him, of course?"

"Lon said he was sending some of the boys out. They won't know where to go. I know where Tom will go," Virgie's face was heavy with trouble as she twisted into her heavy coat.

"I'm going, too," Marian said abruptly.

"It's going to be an ugly night," Virgie objected. "You'd better go home before it freezes."

"Mother—I'm going. Tell Frank to put the chains on."

"Wrap yourself up then. Lucy, you stay here by the phone. If Lon calls tell him we're out on a hunt—if we find Tom we'll bring him in."

Wills drove and Marian huddled in the middle of the single seat of Virgie's old car. Freezing rain spatted on the roof, coated the windshield. The light failed with the swift completeness of mountain night. Wills got out to scrub the windshield clean. The wheels slewed on the curves in spite of the chains and Virgie's profile, against the dim light, was granite and grim.

"Drive on," she said. "I'll tell you when to turn."

"He wouldn't take the road, Mother," Marian worried. "And even if we met him we couldn't see him."

"Drive on," said Virgie, flatly.

They passed a looming mill and a curve where a waterfall came down, roaring and splashing under a high bridge.

"Left—at the next road," said Virgie.

"Mother—" an edge of panic was in Marian's voice. "You don't think—"

"I know!" said Virgie, soberly. "They were over there—Wallace and the others. Tom didn't know before who was working against us—but now he knows. Take it slow, Wills—this road is dirt and it'll be slippery."

"It's freezing a little. The chains hold. I can go faster if it won't make you nervous."

Marian huddled, small and frightened, under Branford Wills' elbow, her head in a snug beret, scarcely reaching his shoulder. Once he looked around and gave her a scrap of smile, in the dim light from the dash, but she was looking solemnly and searchingly ahead.

"How awful—to be wandering around in the hills on a night like this!" she said. "Poor old Tom!"

"I know how awful it can be," Wills agreed. "I had two nights of it. There's so much sky and black air and empty wind and savage dark around you—and you feel a sort of hatred in it—as though it would kill you if it could. And the branches reach out and snatch and almost snarl—and boulders and roots trip you up—and the wind gathers up handfuls of ice and flings them in your face."

"And you were lost!" said Marian in a small, frail voice.

He looked down at her. "I'm still lost," he said, levelly.

Virgie cleared her throat. "I'm here," she reminded them, "but I'm old and my hearing isn't what it used to be."

"Tom wouldn't be lost," Marian essayed the commonplace again. "He knows his way anywhere in these mountains—no matter how dark it might be."

The river was alongside now, dark and noisy and hidden by the whirling dash of sleety rain. Trees hung low, and the darkness grew thicker; it brooded and was hostile and fearsome. Marian clutched a sleeve and laid her face against it. Wind shook the old car fiercely, but the wheels dug and spun and plowed on. Once a frightened rabbit leaped through the darting steel rods of the rain, its eyes green and terrified. Ice was glassy on the hood, the windshield wiper gouged a feeble arc and then failed.

"Why doesn't he come here to speak for himself, if that's true?" Wills asked.

"Because," said Lucy faintly. "I've got him—locked up. He was going to leave. He didn't do it. He was a fool—but he isn't crooked. I locked him up. Shall I let him out, Mrs. Morgan?"

Virgie's smile crinkled her face and she burst into a sudden laugh. "No—don't let him out, Lucy. Keep him there till he realizes what a grand girl you are. Keep him there till he melts."

Wetomachic Camp Fire Girls News
The girls and the leaders of the Wetomachic Camp Fire passed their trail Seekers examination. We are looking forward to getting our rank beads at our March ceremonial.

We started a new system this month for our meetings. The first and the third Thursdays of the month are to be business meetings. The second meeting is to be entertainment and the last meeting we are to work on hand craft. We are working on hand craft now. Some girls are making belts of wooden blocks and stringers, while others are making book cards of wood and copper. We are also learning some new camp fire songs.

RYTHM ROLLERS
Well, well it seems that we have another mumps dedication. This time it's for Mary Jane. She denies —we doubt.

It seems that somebody still uses a piggy bank. Meila Greco has a new pair of skates.

Surprise! The three musketeers, Dottie, Edna and Shina are back at the skating rink.

Well we have another patriot. This time it's an Army man. Oscar Olson is headed for the Panama Canal—more power to you Ozzie. Buzz, what's all the excitement about? They tell me that Don Cleveland made a big flop at the rink Sunday. It just isn't ethical!

Two of our old sdrifcens came to visit Tinley this Sunday. No one else but Pete Hass and Arnold Arndt.

Friday night really seemed to be The night for Wolf and Jimmy. And then, Mason helped by wiping up the floor.

Millie Flannery denies her engagement. Ah me, such is love. We wonder what the big attraction is at the lunch room every Sunday night. You'll have to see Bettenhausen for more information on the subject.

Now try to be good skates until we see you again.

Tawanka Campfire Girls
The Tawanka Campfire Girls held their weekly meeting at the home of their assistant guardian. The girls took their test for the first rank. The treasurer, Mary Jane Consineau could not attend do to the mumps. After the meeting refreshments were served.

SHIPSTAD & JOHNSON'S ICE FOLLIES OF 1941 TO OPEN AT ARENA MAR. 24; BESS EHRHARDT STAR OF BIG SHOW

A triumphant burst of showmanship will ring down the curtain on the 1940-41 skating season at the Chicago Arena, 400 East Erie St., March 22, as preparations begin for the Shipstad and Johnson's Ice Follies of 1941, opening a 14 day run at the Arena on March 24th.

So great was the rush for tickets for the ice follies October run at the Arena that literally thousands were turned away at the gates, unable to purchase even single tickets. It is for the benefit of these thousands that the Arena management is bringing the show back to Chicago.

Bess Ehrhardt will again headline the cast of 65 skating stars, including Evelyn Chandler, the world's best acrobatic skater; Roy Shipstad, one of the co-producers, whose spinning ability has won him the title of "The Human Top"; co-producers Eddie Shipstad and Oscar Johnson, internationally known comedians; Bruce Mapes, partner with Miss Chandler in spectacular pair-skating; Frick and Frack, the oft imitated, but unequalled Swiss comedians; Ruby and Bobby Maxon, former Pacific Coast Pair Champions; Osbourne Colson, Canadian Gold medalist; Papez and Zwack, Heinie Brock, Les Hamilton and the beautiful Ice Follies.

Mail orders with enclosed, self addressed, stamped envelopes will receive special attention, and tickets are now on sale at The Arena Box Office, 400 East Erie Street, and The Hub, corner of State and Jackson, Chicago.

Why Must They Starve?

A National Committee Has Been Formed for Food Relief in Stricken Nations

A National Committee of 400 leading Americans with former President Herbert Hoover as Honorary Chairman, has been formed to find a way to feed millions of starving people in the invaded countries. Already 1020 auxiliary committees in various cities throughout the country have organized to support the movement.

Of the 37,000,000 people in Finland, Belgium, Holland, Norway and Central Poland, great numbers are facing death from starvation and disease. America could put an end to this.

The Committee states that no money, supplies or ships, are requested, and that its purpose is to bring the facts before the public and invite an expression of opinion concerning the plan.

1. Will there be actual starvation in Europe this winter?

Yes. Under normal conditions Belgium imports 49 per cent of its food, Holland 33 per cent, and Norway 57 per cent. These imports are now cut off by British and German blockades. Central Poland is from 30 to 40 per cent deficient because of the tri-partition of Poland. Finland, not occupied but partially blockaded, normally imports 22 per cent of her foods; she has also lost one-tenth of her best soil. In all countries unusually severe weather destroyed much of the grain crops; military mobilization prevented planting and harvesting. Invasion destroyed storage and equipment, and disrupted transportation. Unless food is imported many thousands will starve, and many more will die from disease, before the next harvest. These people need protection of native food from seizure by occupying armies as well as protection for imported foods.

break of the war in September, 1939, permitting relief in Poland and other occupied areas, have been scrupulously kept.

2. Can this famine be prevented without helping Germany?

Yes. The Hoover plan, which operated effectively in the last war, provides for absolute control of native and imported food by a Neutral Commission, assisted by a great number of volunteer patriotic nationals. Supplies will go directly to the hungry people for whom they are intended—and to no one else.

3. Does this plan aid the Allies?

Yes. Feeding these democratic peoples will maintain their courage, sustain allegiance to ideals, rebuild morale, increase England's prestige as a humanitarian nation and salvage native supplies from absorption.

4. Will Germany profit if it breaks the agreement?

No. The plan provides for only 120,000 to 140,000 tons of imported food to be on hand at one time. The Germans use ten times that much each month. If Germany committed the maximum violation and seized the entire supply, this would furnish them food for only three days, and relief would end.

5. Will Germany feed these nations?

No. Every country at war measures its supplies, military and food, by the necessities of war. Since Germany does not know how long the present war will last, it is not likely to feed these countries at the risk of depleting supplies needed for the German army and people.

6. Will feeding workmen in these countries strengthen Germany?

No. Workmen whose labor is useful to the Central economy of Germany will be fed by the Germans—man, of them in Germany itself as deportees. But their women and children will be left unprotected for. A new Europe cannot be built from physical and mental wreckage.

7. Will starving people revolt against Germany?

No. Military resistance is impossible when disarmament of a nation is complete. A single tank can easily subdue an entire area. It is barbarous to even suggest that naked-handed women and children could join in fighting against modern weapons.

8. Would Germany keep the agreement?

Yes. The whole plan is predicated upon the fact that relief will terminate if there are violations by Germany. Pestilence, already appearing in the occupied areas, respects no boundaries. It would sweep all countries—Germany as well as the rest. Germany knows this, and would keep the agreement if for no other reason than its own self-interest. Agreements made by the present German Government since the out-

9. Will importation of food weaken the British blockade?

No. Under this proposal Britain would pass food ships through the blockade—one by one. All food would be turned over to the Neutral Commission for checking and distribution. If Britain discovered that food was being misappropriated by Germany, or any one else, imports would cease.

10. Will increasing the general food supply in Europe release German products for making munitions?

No. Under the Hoover proposal for complete control of domestic and imported supplies, and the return of the equivalent of basic foods already taken, less rather than more products would be available to Germany. When food arrives at ports of the five countries it will be received, cared for, and distributed directly to those in need by a neutral organization, made up of Americans and citizens from other countries which are not at war.

11. Did the British supply food to occupied Belgium during the last war?

Yes. At first Britain was opposed, but after public opinion became positive the British Government consented—with misgivings. When, however, the Belgian Relief Commission, under Mr. Hoover, functioned so efficiently and fairly, responsible British leaders expressed unqualified satisfaction. After searching investigation had proved that no supplies were diverted to Germany they described relief operations as a miracle of organization. Eventually they contributed more than $100,000,000 to the project.

12. Will this plan deprive Americans of food, or involve us in war?

No. The people we relieve will pay for their own food. We ask no donations or government appropriations. If there should be no surplus of food in the United States, necessary supplies will be purchased in South America. Nor is America asked to send its ships into war zones. The neutral organization, as previously was the case, will operate its own ships under its own flag. Rigorous censorship in these small countries prevents the people from pleading their own cause. But faith in humanity and democratic ideals can be restored—to bear fruit in a better day—if the free people of America speak in their behalf.

You are invited to write to the Committee, and to request your friends to do the same in order that public opinion may find full expression. Communications may be sent to National Committee on Food for the Small Democracies, 420 Lexington Avenue, New York, N. Y.

A Lenten Lesson

As another Lenten season begins, let us read again these two verses from the twentieth chapter of the Gospel according to Luke: "And he said unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things which be Caesar's and unto God the things which be God's."

"And they could not take hold upon his words before the people, and they marvelled at his doctrine and held their peace."

Why did they marvel at His doctrine? First: Because they could find no reason in this answer, and second, because they must have sensed in the deeper implications of these words, the greatest challenge to the totalitarian state that has ever been let loose upon this planet.

Until then—and since then—the decree was that to Caesar must all things be rendered. Sometimes this was commanded by a godless Caesar; in other times by Caesar identifying himself as God, or with God. Church and State were one, or the State was all and God nothing.

Jefferson and his peers gathered at Philadelphia wrote the greatest charter of freedom that mortal men have ever put on parchment. But the hand of God Himself guided their fingers. Religion is the mother of democracy.

"We hold these Truths to be Self Evident, that All Men are created Free; that they are endowed"—by whom? By Hitler, Stalin, Mussolini, the war lords of Japan, by Caesar? No, "by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights,"—rights Caesar has no lawful power to take from them, which men themselves have no right to vote away,—rights that inhere in Man simply because he is the Child of God—rights that are beyond the power of princes, or the might of majorities.

The legacy of constitutional government, of the liberty of private judgment, of responsibility for one's inmost actions to God, is precious and fragile. It rests on a narrow ledge. For a brief space in Athens, for a short time in the brave days of Rome, for a few decades during the Renaissance, in Switzerland, in Scandinavia, in England and in America, and mostly since 1776, man has been free. The rest is darkness. It is estimated that 40 billion human beings have lived on this planet since the birth of Christ. Of these teeming generations it is probable that no more than one billion, or less than 3 per cent, have ever lived under a political structure where they might call their souls their own, where they were something other than human cattle to be ordered about by the arbitrary will of other men.

In how many meetings Americans have assembled, social, fraternal, political, labor, agriculture, religious gatherings? There is the government that still lives where the Potomac flows to the sea. It has the power to suppress rebellion, the power to raise armies and navies, to conscript millions to fight and die in defense of their native land. But the government, neither by unanimous vote of Congress, nor by the order of the Commander-in-Chief of our armed might, has any power to prevent our meeting for any lawful purpose. Our right to meet is inviolate. It is beyond Caesar. It is protected by two words,— "peaceful assembly"—in the Constitution that so many hold up to contempt.

There is no power in THIS land to prevent your writing to your Congressman.

Finding New Markets For Farmers

Henry Ford studies plastics with Robert A. Boyer, who is in charge of research in this field. Long ago the auto manufacturer visioned a new age when harvests of the fields would become raw products of industry. His first commercial success in decorative plastics was in turning soybeans into instrument board clusters. With certain other crops he has now advanced so far in structural plastics that he says he will be building a wholly plastic body within a few years—a body that will be lighter and stronger than steel. "Only door locks and hinges will be of metal," says Mr. Ford. Possibly a growing shortage of steel and the dwindling foreign markets for agriculture will hurry along the plastic car.

America Our Home Sweet Home

TO A NATION that can point to approximately 40% of its 130,000,000 people who own their own homes, "Home, Sweet Home" is no mere figure of speech. Here, home has a deeper, richer significance than it has in any other land throughout the world.

Since its glorious founding, America has adopted millions of the hunted, the persecuted and the oppressed. It has taught them the love of tolerance, the love of liberty, and the love of being able to own and to fervently say . . . "Our Home, Sweet Home."

To those few who would lend any moral or physical aid to the forces of dehumanization seeking to violate the sanctity of our home-loving people, a united, aroused America thunders "Beware."

This reminder of our heritage is presented to you through the co-operation of the America and its home-lovers do not dread the future. Our love of free speech, free religious worship, free assembly and a free press is today more deeply imbedded in the heart of each American than ever before. We place our unbounded trust in a Providence who has blessed us for over 150 years. We place our destiny and guidance in the souls, hearts and bodies of our people who will fight to the death for the freedom of their hands, the freedom of their intelligence and the freedom of their conscience.

We are proud to be part of the first line of defense of American liberties . . . to always stand militantly at the side of every true American against the inroads of doctrines seeking to destroy America's priceless heritage.

MOKENA

To Organize Bowling League

Any woman or girl in Mokena interested in bowling are requested to meet in the home of Mrs. John Marti Monday evening, March 3rd at 8 o'clock for the purpose of organizing a bowling league.

Mokena PTA News

The regular meeting of the Mokena PTA was held Tuesday evening and was very well attended.

The Mokena school chorus under the direction of Miss Hennessey, delighted the audience with their songs, which were very much appreciated. Following a short business meeting, Mrs. Needham, program chairman, introduced Miss Edna Keith, formerly supervisor of the elementary public schools of Joliet as the guest speaker.

Miss Keith gave a very interesting address dealing with the history of the national PTA which was founded 44 years ago. It was indeed an inspiration to hear what has been accomplished during these years.

A small group of women banded together for one purpose, to give the child a better place in the home and the community. They succeeded thru their tireless efforts and their vision and developed that small membership of women into an organization of two and a quarter million members of parents and teachers.

In an all embracing but very concise manner the accomplishments of the leaders of the National PTA were presented. Eight candles graced the speakers table and Mrs. Nebeker local president was asked to light these candles in honor of the founder and the fine principles of the organization, while Miss Keith explained these principles. One candle was lighted in honor of Mrs. Nebeker. A beautifully decorated cake, held a candle for each of the past presidents of the Mokena PTA who were the guests of honor at this meeting. As each former president stepped forward they lit a candle on the cake and expressed their hope and wish that everybody would do their best to further the cause of the PTA. They were then presented with a lovely corsage of daffodils as a token of appreciation for their service. Those present on the honor committee were: Mrs. Lucille McCabe, Mrs. F. Steele, Mrs. N. F. Heiman, Mrs. J. Balaz, Mrs. Roy Krapp, and Mrs. A. Shoop. Mrs. H. Kohlhaugen, Mrs. Milton Krapp and Mrs. W. Lowe, also former presidents, were unable to be present.

Delicious refreshments were served on a beautifully decorated table by Mesdames Steen, Clevenger, Kremel and Walters.

The play "A Springtime Fantasy" recently presented by the Mokena Garden Club at the school auditorium was a very successful affair and was much enjoyed. It was well acted and cleverly presented.

The March meeting of the Mokena Garden Club will be held next Tuesday at 2 p. m., in the home of Mrs. Walter Yunker. Mr. MacLean of Joliet will speak on trees and any one interested is invited to attend.

The Cubs Den No. 1 gave their parents an enjoyable evening recently at a Lincoln's Birthday party in the home of their Den Mother, Mrs. Roy Krapp. During the meeting the following awards were made: Gunther Thiel, Denner stripes and silver arrow; Leigh Krapp, Denner stripes, gold and silver arrows; Ronald Steen, Denner stripes and silver arrow; Walter Geffert, gold and silver arrows; Rudy Marshke, Wolf Badge and gold arrow; Jack Martie, Bobcat badge. The boys entertained with a game and several songs. Refreshments prepared by the boys were served.

The regular meeting of the Women's Guild of the St. John Evangelical church was held Thursday last week in the church parlors. The hostesses were: Mrs. Myrtle Cooper, Mrs. Frances Braun; Mrs. Elmer Benson, Mrs. Frank Sievert, Mrs. Lizzie Lauffer and Mrs. Mary Yunker. The room was attractively decorated in red, white and blue with silhouettes of Washington and Lincoln used as table decorations on a background of red, white and blue striped paper.

The devotional program consisted of the topic for the meeting by Mrs. Julia Schiek. The Scripture reading by Mrs. Fred E. Yunker and selections by Mrs. Haeefe, Luella Marti, Edna Spiess, Alice Homering and Mildred Shevlin.

The program for the afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Lawrence Kohl and Mrs. Gertrude Marti who had arranged a quiz program. Mrs. Edna Spiess, Luella Marti and Mildred Shevlin vied with Mrs. Roy Krapp, Mae Mall and Mrs. Will Lowe in answering the questions. Mrs. M. Geuther and Mrs. Elmer Benson dressed as Washington and Lincoln acted as judges.

The George Merrick family have moved into their new home on Front street formerly occupied by the telephone office.

Mrs. Hugo Niethammer is helping in caring for her uncle Arthur Lauffer who is ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lauffer will move Saturday onto the Jake Mager farm east of Mokena.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Lind will move into the Barney Hostert house vacated by the C. Lauffer family.

Mrs. Harry Cooper has returned from Silver Cross hospital where she was a recent patient.

WON'T YOU COME FOR TEA?
(See Recipes Below)

TIDBITS FOR TEA TABLES

A visiting celebrity comes to town, there is a new bride to be entertained. For these and many other occasions, an afternoon tea provides just the right touch of sociability.

You can be on the committee in charge and still have as much fun as the guest of honor if you make your plans carefully. Plan to make only enough tea for 12 teacup servings at one time, and repeat the process as fresh tea is needed. A large saucepan works like a charm for such teamaking. Tie 6 tablespoons of tea loosely in 2 thicknesses of cheesecloth. Place the bag in the saucepan and pour 2 quarts of vigorously boiling water over it. Cover and let stand for just 5 minutes over a very low heat. Then pour the tea immediately into a teapot which has been rinsed with scalding water. The tea bag can be removed and the remainder of the tea kept over low heat until it is needed.

If it is part of your job to buy the tea accompaniments—the sugar, lemon and cream—remember that there are about 80 tablets of sugar in a 1-pound box and that you should count on 2 per serving. Allow 2 tablespoons of coffee cream per serving—a pint and a half of cream will be more than sufficient for 25 persons. Allow also 1 slice of lemon per serving. A large lemon makes about 10 slices, 1/4 inch thick.

Then, should you be asked to bring two or three kinds of cookies or several dozen midget tea cakes, here are recipes that will make your tea contribution outstanding. There are fruit cake fingers rolled in chopped almonds and toasted in the oven, a simple-to-make tidbit that has a special affinity for hot, clear tea served with lemon. The small almond finger biscuits have pale beige frosting and are fragile enough even for a bride's tea. Amusing as can be the Swedish nut wafers, which are baked on the bottom of bread pans, cut into strips and molded over a rolling pin into crisp semi-circles.

Fruit Tea Fingers.

(Makes 16 fingers)

Fruit cake
1/4 cup condensed milk
3/4 cup almonds (finely chopped)

Cut fruit cake into 16 fingers about 2 1/2 inches long, 3/4 inch wide and 1/2 inch thick, or cut into 1-inch squares. Spread each finger with condensed milk on all sides and roll in chopped almonds. Place in a 2-quart heat-resistant glass utility dish and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 30 minutes or until lightly browned.

Swedish Nut Wafers.

(Makes 6 dozen wafers)

1/4 cup shortening
3/4 cup sugar
1 egg (well-beaten)
1 1/2 cups flour (all-purpose)
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/2 cup chopped nut meats

Cream shortening until soft, then add sugar gradually, creaming until light and fluffy. Add egg and combine thoroughly. Sift flour once before measuring, then add salt and baking powder and sift again. Add milk to the creamed ingredients, then flour and vanilla. Spread a part of the batter in a very thin, even layer over the bottom of a bread pan, using a small spatula. Sprinkle with nut meats and mark into strips 3/4 inches wide by 4 1/2 inches long. Bake, one pan at a time, in a moderately slow oven (325 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 12 minutes. Cut into strips, loosen strips from bottom of pan with spatula, and shape each one over the rolling pin. If strips become too brittle to shape, return them to oven to reheat and soften.

Almond Finger Biscuits.

(Makes 5 dozen)

1 1/2 cups cake flour
1 teaspoon cream of tartar
1/2 teaspoon soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup butter
1/4 cup sugar
1 egg (separated)
1 tablespoon warm water
1/2 cup almonds (finely chopped)
1/4 teaspoon vanilla
3/4 cup confectioners' sugar

Sift flour once before measuring. Add soda, salt, and cream of tartar and sift together. Cream butter until soft, add sugar gradually, then add egg yolk beaten with warm water. Add flour to creamed ingredients and combine well. Chill dough in refrigerator for about 1 hour. Roll stiff dough out 1/8 inch thick on lightly floured board or pastry canvas. Add vanilla to egg white, then beat in confectioners' sugar (use rotary beater) gradually until the icing is smooth and the proper consistency to spread. Spread frosting over dough and sprinkle surface with almonds. Cut dough into strips 1/2 inch wide and 3 inches long, then place carefully on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) until they are a light brown color, about 10 minutes.

Tiny Tea Cakes.

(88 2-inch cakes)

4 1/2 cups cake flour
6 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup butter or other shortening
2 1/2 cups sugar
5 eggs (separated)
1 1/2 cup milk
2 teaspoons vanilla

Sift flour once before measuring. Add baking powder and salt and sift 3 times. Cream butter until soft, add sugar gradually, creaming until the mixture is light and fluffy. Add the dry ingredients to creamed mixture in thirds, alternately with milk, beating until smooth after each addition. Add vanilla. Beat egg whites until they are stiff but will still flow from an inverted bowl, and fold them lightly into the cake batter. Drop the batter from a dessert spoon into oiled muffin tins about 2 inches in diameter. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 20 minutes. Cool and ice with your favorite icing.

Pecan Crescents.

(Makes 30 crescents)

1/2 cup butter
3 tablespoons powdered sugar
1 cup flour (all-purpose)
1 cup pecans (finely chopped)
1/2 teaspoon vanilla
Cream butter, add sugar and blend well. Add flour gradually and mix thoroughly. Stir in nut meats. Shape into small rolls, about the size of a finger, then form into crescents. Place on a greased baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for approximately 20 minutes. Roll in powdered sugar while warm.

Meringue Bars.

(Makes 40 1 1/4-inch squares)

1/2 cup shortening
1 cup sugar
2 egg yolks (well-beaten)
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 1/2 cups cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
3/4 cup jam

Cream shortening and add sugar gradually. Beat in egg yolks and vanilla. Sift flour once before measuring, then add baking powder and salt and sift again. Add flour to shortening and sugar mixture, mixing thoroughly. Spread 1/4 inch thick on well-greased baking sheet. Spread lightly with jam. Top with the following meringue and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 25 minutes.

Meringue

2 egg whites
1 cup brown sugar (firmly packed)
1 cup nut meats (finely cut)
Beat egg whites until stiff, and gradually beat in the sugar. Fold in nut meats.

Causes of Sty And Means of Preventing It

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

"A STY is really a small boil and begins as a hard swelling which forms a hard lump and causes a swelling of the whole lid and sometimes a bloodshot appearance of the surface of the eyeball."

TODAY'S HEALTH
COLUMN

In most cases it is due to organisms which cause an infection in the little oil glands. The opening of the oil gland gets plugged up, the oil becomes thick and a yellow pus forms.

When a sty occurs the first thought naturally is to get rid of this disgusting boil or lump. The usual treatment is the application of hot cloths to bring the little lump to a head and then squeezing out that yellow cheesy matter. In children the mother may give a dose of castor oil as part of the treatment, which should do more good than harm.

Dr. Barton

What is needed is a "building up" treatment that will strengthen the body so that the youngster will take a greater interest in school and play. The old fashioned but effective cod-liver oil, plenty of fresh air and attention to regularity of bowel movement will usually prevent the formation of more stys.

In many cases the child's blood is thin and iron tonics and eating of meat—especially liver—is advisable.

Causes of Sty.

Our eye specialists tell us that some stys are due to eye strain and other eye defects, but agree that in the majority of cases the youngster and the adult also, is below par physically and needs a thorough examination by the family physician and dentist.

When there is a succession of stys, one following after another, it may be due to one infecting a nearby surface of the eyelid, but it is more likely to be "strong evidence" that the patient requires a tonic.

A sty may sometimes be prevented from reaching full development by hot applications, squeezing out the contents, and then using hot applications again.

Nervousness Affects All Body Processes

OSLER, the greatest physician of modern times, had three ideals: One, to do the day's work well and not worry about tomorrow. Second, to act the Golden Rule. Third, to cultivate a measure of calmness.

Most of us try to live up to the first and second ideals, but many, if not most, of us fail in the third; we do not try to acquire that needed calmness of spirit.

In speaking of the various symptoms affecting the body processes due to lack of calmness or nerve control, Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Mayo clinic, in the Journal of the American Medical Association says, "Often as I listen to the stories of these patients, it seems to me that their symptoms can most easily be explained as due to instability of the involuntary part of the nervous system which causes it to play disconcerting tricks on the heart, blood vessels, digestive tract, kidneys and skin. The patient will suffer with one or more of such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, trembling, chilliness, flashes of heat, flushing of the skin, sweating, waves of goose flesh, palpitation, rapid or irregular heart beat, air hunger, quivering of abdomen, intestinal cramping, diarrhoea, urticaria (hives), bloating, frequent urination, perhaps a blocking of the nose, and fear of impending disaster."

That tiredness, mental and physical, affects certain parts of the brain and deprives us of some of our calmness and so causes the above symptoms; also that disease or injury can likewise affect this part of the brain.

The thought then is that if you find yourself easily upset, easily discouraged with symptoms pointing to trouble in various organs, you should undergo an examination by your physician and dentist. If no infection is found, try to acquire and cultivate calmness.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—What causes my eyes to be swollen in the mornings?

A.—Might be due to some food eaten the night before. This could also occur if you are sensitive to feathers.

Q.—Would injections be inclined to give immunity from colds? Are vitamin A tablets more effective than the injections?

A.—Reports on the effectiveness of injections against colds vary. Some physicians report success as high as 60 per cent. Others claim only 10 per cent.

THINGS for You TO MAKE

Pattern No. Z9220

CROCHET stars again in the form of attractive creamer and sugar panholders. Gay little flower sprays distinguish them as a set—lovely to give, receive or keep. Best of all they are speedily done in single crochet.

Z9220, 15c, brings the detailed directions. Do them in the kitchen colors of red, light green or blue with white flowers; the blue gives a lovely Wedgwood effect. Send order to:

La Libre Belgique

La Libre Belgique (Free Belgium) was one of the most famous of the "underground" newspapers during the first World War. Despite the persistent efforts of the German army of occupation, the newspaper was published and circulated at irregular intervals for more than three years. It was read eagerly by the Belgians, circulation rising at one point to 25,000 copies, although there were heavy penalties for mere possession of a copy.

In April, 1916, the plant was discovered by the Germans in a vacant factory in Brussels where it had operated for more than a year. Mass arrests followed, but the paper continued to appear with a new editor and a new plant.

The Same Expert Care

At the first sign of a chest cold—the Dionne Quintuplets' chests and throats—are rubbed with Children's Mild Musterole—a product made especially to promptly relieve the DISTRESS of children's colds and resulting bronchial and croupy coughs.

Relief usually comes quickly because Musterole is MORE than an ordinary "salve." It helps break up local congestion. As Musterole is used on the Quints you may be sure you are using just about the BEST product made. Also in Regular and Extra Strength for those preferring a stronger product.

Instinct and Intelligence

Instinct perfected is a faculty of using and even constructing organized instruments; intelligence perfected is the faculty of making and using unorganized instruments.—Henri Bergson.

The Crimped-Center Disk! Guarantees Long Life

McCormick-Deering Disk Harrows

WHEN you buy a McCormick-Deering Disk Harrow you are getting a lot more than an ordinary disk harrow. The reason—because McCormick-Deering uses only crimped-center, heat-treated disks. The crimped center serves as a strong reinforcement or shock absorber for the disk at the center—the point of greatest strain. The crimp, being flat, permits the use of spacing spools with flat ends that are carefully ground. This provides an extremely close fit between the spacing spools and the disks, preventing looseness and breakage after a few seasons of use.

The next time you are passing our store stop in and let us show you how this one feature means years of satisfactory service. We can furnish you with whatever type of disk harrow you need—tractor or horse-drawn—from our complete line.
